Plan to beautify campus expedited

Lot 13 to go back to nature as part of pedestrian mall crossing Ridge St.

The BG News

The University administration is developing plans to change a parking lot on campus into a grassy area with the prospect of being a pedestrian mall.

At an Oct. 31 meeting, the Undergraduate Student Government passed a resolution stating that USG wanted to keep the parking lot in front of Eppler there against the plans of the University administration to put in a grassy area for students, said Jason Wolfe, an executive cabinet member and environmental liaison to the USG.

"The USG representatives and senators never asked their constituents about the issue and voiced something that not everyone agreed on," Wolfe said. "This is not an issue of parking spaces; everyone knows we need spaces. This is by some means an issue of life and death."

Wolfe, an adviser of USG president Jennifer Mathe, expressed concern with why USG would not want to preserve the environment rather than destroy

it. "It is not every day that someone is trying to put the environment back into its place, and that is what administration wants to do, put something back rather than take it out," he said.

As USG president, Mathe said she supports what the USG passes, including the resolution con-

Reward offered in fraternity bombing

Public Safety posts money for information on attack at house

A $250 reward will be given to anyone who can present information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for the drain bombing at the Pi Kappa Phi house last month.

"We are working up a flyer now offering a $250 reward for any information that leads to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for making [the bombs]," said Barbara Waddell, University public information officer for public safety.

Waddell said the case is currently under investigation, and University police are working on some leads.

"We do have some information that involves some names," Waddell said.

People with information involving the case can call 372-7990 and ask for Dennis Ehlers.

"They call that number if they're not really concerned about maintaining the anonymity," Waddell said.

Those who do not want to give their name can call 372-6000. Waddell said investigators will try and arrange something.

The reward, which is being offered through the crime prevention hotline, drew a quiet reaction from the Pi Kappa Phi house.

Contamination report findings 'misinterpreted'

Lifelong exposure to Bowling Green drinking water is about as harmful as consuming 70 percent of one aspirin over the course of 70 years, according to Dr. David Baker, director of the Water Quality Laboratory at Heidelberg College in Tiffin.

Baker recently released a report heavily criticizing the results of the "Tap Water Blues" report, which named Bowling Green drinking water as having the third highest level of herbicides in the country.

"The reality is that, in the city of Bowling Green, the level of risk would account for one additional cancer [case] among the 30,000 residents every 70 years," Baker said.

Baker was one of four guests on Tuesday night's "Journal 1994" program on WBGU-TV. The topic of the program was, "Is your drinking water safe?"

The show's other three guests were: Bob Wulforst, pesticide regulation control manager for the Ohio Department of Agriculture; Richard Clark, political chairman of the Bowling Green chapter of the Sierra Club; and John Sadzewicz, chief of the Division of Drinking and Ground Waters at the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency.

Baker said he believes the authors of the "Tap Water Blues" report greatly misinterpreted their study's data, one-third of which was borrowed from Baker's own studies at Heidelberg.

While studies have shown that herbicides can cause cancer in animals, the amounts of herbicides present in these studies were millions of times higher than the levels in the water, Baker said.

Amounts of herbicides present in Bowling Green water are so minimal that the possibility of additional cases of cancer result-

Safe sex speaker addresses Greeks

Lecturer focuses on STD education through information, not scare tactics

By Melissa Lipowski
The BG News

Members of University fraternities and sororities gained an entirely different perspective on sexual activity Wednesday night as Leslie Brecht, women's educator for AIDS Volunteers of Cincinnati, demonstrated how to practice safe sex.

"I go around the state of Ohio and show people how to put on a condom correctly," Brecht said. "My mom is so proud."

Throughout the presentation, sponsored by Panhellenic Council, Brecht not only provided students with the latest statistics on the transmission and spread of AIDS, but she also focused on how students can protect themselves from contracting HIV.

Because AIDS is the sixth largest killer of young people ages 15 to 24, it is important not to use scare tactics to educate people. Rather, it is important to give them the most accurate information available so they can make correct decisions, Brecht said.

"At this stage of your lives, you have your entire future before you," she said. "If you don't make an effort to keep yourself safe, HIV will ruin your chances."

If students learn to use consistent precautions and they use them correctly, they will do a good job at keeping themselves safe, she said.

With a variety of contraceptives available on the market, however, it is often difficult for students to choose which ones are the most effective in blocking the transmission of STDs as well as the ones that have the least amount of strain on their pocketbooks, she said.

"Just like hair care products come in a variety of forms, such as creams, gels and mousses, so do contraceptives," Brecht said. "It is important for you to know which ones best suit your lifestyle."

In addition to using a barrier method of contraception, such as condoms, students should also use water-based lubricants, such as KY Jelly, instead of oil and grease lubricants like baby oil, petroleum jelly and shortening, she said.

It is also important to use a spermicide such as non-oxynol 9, she said.

Brecht also recommended students consider the newer products on the market, such as the female condom, vaginal contraceptive film and contraceptive foam.

Grassy area should replace parking lot

The squirrels have a chance to expand their living quarters to Lot 13, which was used for parking before construction began on the Eppler Complex a year and a half ago.

Since then, the 42 parking spaces have been idle, and no one has been bothered too much. After all, when you're on a campus with around 17,000 students, 42 parking spots don't amount to much.

Now the construction is about to end, and the parking lot has become a point of controversy: should we keep it and provide students and faculty with 42 more spaces, or should we make it into a grassy area where students can study and enjoy the ever-disappearing "green-ness?"

The administration is working with an architect on a possible project to change Lot 13 into a grassy mall-type area with walkways and landscaping. However, nothing is official at this point.

Undergraduate Student Government voted to keep the lot, even though some members, like Jason Wolfe, a cabinet member and environmental liason, disagreed with the decision.

"It is not every day that someone is trying to put the environment back into its place and that is what administration wants to do, put something back rather than take it out," Wolfe said.

The News also believes the parking lot should be replaced with grass.

Obviously, parking spaces are needed on campus, but would 42 spots really make a difference? The News doesn't think so.

Unfortunately, the parking problem would not be solved if we kept Lot 13.

In addition, the environment is being destroyed faster than anyone can really imagine. If given the opportunity to help improve it, why not?

Granted, adding a grassy area that's relatively small will not help to expand or even improve the ecosystem. But hardly anyone could argue that a grassy area with trees and bushes would not be more beautiful and peaceful than an old black parking lot. And it definitely would not hurt.

The News urges the administration to seriously consider the option. It would be a major improvement to the University.

The squirrels would be happier, too.

Parties will learn to cooperate

If you ever want to see a man depressed, just take all of his life-long aspirations and throw them down the crapper.

That is what happened to me as I sat in a downtown Columbus hotel Tuesday night. The only reprieve I had from the continual bad news was the free beer in a courtesy suite.

My fellow young Democrats and I sat around drinking anything we could get our hands on, channel surfing for some good news. We knew that something good had to happen - but alas, there was nothing.

The Democrats got their butts whipped worse than Ohio University in any given football game. We lost and we lost big. I haven't been able to sleep well for days, for I am trying to figure out how things went so horribly wrong.

Well, I know as a student of this University's outstanding political science and history departments that a party that has control of the White House will have to accept some losses, but this is nothing short of astounding.

I can already hear what a lot of you Republicans are saying right now. Why should I be surprised, it is what the country has always wanted. Well, I do not think that when the people voted for change this year that they had in mind what is now transpiring in the Capitol.

Change is good and I even accept the message the voters sent: the government is not getting things done. Well, I don't think people along the lines of Phil Gramm, Al D'Amato, Jesse Helms and Newt Gingrich are going to come up with any grand scheme to kill what ails us.

Well, what about the "Contract for America?"

Well, what about it? I had hoped we had learned that trickle-down economics and vast military spending is what got us in this mess in the first place.

I have just one word for Republicans: deficit.

It is out of control and the Clinton administration, along with a Democratic Congress, were the first ones to do something about it in 40 years. It is going to be an interesting first hundred days for the next Congress.

People will say, "But we had something to believe in when Reagan was in office." I like to quote the Bible on that item, "thou shalt not worship false gods."

Reagan had the one quintessential public relations tool that has helped every president since WWII - communism.

Old Ronnie used this tool to perfection. Whenever the domestic scene was not so peachy the Gipper could say, "But what about those Godless communists that are threatening to take over the world?"

As we all know now, the communists of the '80s were in no position to take over the world because Reagan spent them into oblivion. And because of that he left his running mate, George Bush, out in the cold - or maybe I should say out of the Cold War.

Communism was the ultimate trump card, and we were all out of those when George wanted to use one.

Bush was so desperate to turn around his approval rating by inventing a new trump card, those Godless Muslims. However, you cannot fool all of the people all of the time. And since the economy was sour, George went off to educate his sons on the merits of political life.

Bill doesn't have this advantage either, and even he has tried to shift the focus from domestic to international. The problem is that we have not only spent the communists into oblivion, but we may very well have spent ourselves into oblivion.

Cutting programs that will help the poor will not make us any better off. There is reform needed not only in welfare, but in health care, campaigns and many other political programs.

These, my friends, are not going to be solved until you get involved.

The people in Washington are not going to ignore the special interests that both Democrats and Republicans listen to until you tell them so. We need to get involved or the ever-shrinking job market is going to get worse. Our generation needs to get involved whether it be Democrat, Republican or Independent.

The Republicans are going to find out that if they cannot move the government in a positive direction, they are going to be swept out just as fast as they were swept in and no amount of money is going to save them.

We are reaching a point where nobody thinks that any kind of government, whether it be small or large, can do anything for us. We have to change that because we can do something to better this country, but we have to work together.

That is not some bleeding heart plea for cooperation, it is what makes logical sense. Parties can work together for positive change if they are doing their job right by representing the people. I know there are people out there from both sides of the political spectrum that can work together for a common good.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sportsmanship part of all-sports

I'm writing this letter in response to the comments that Delta Tau Delta wrote in the personals Friday, Nov. 11, to show us its over-inflated ego and immaturity.

Congrats on winning football, guys.

Unfortunately, I didn't take notes, but then I asked myself, did the Deltas take notes on how to play doubles tennis the right way when two pledges of Sigma Alpha Epsilon swept up the competition to win doubles tennis?

Did you take notes when you got whipped twice in intramural softball by Sigma Alpha Epsilon? I guess you didn't realize you just weren't good after your first try.

Oh, and I was just wondering, did you, or should I say your intramural sports chairman, take any notes on the intramural rule that states: a graduate student cannot play any sports for his fraternity; or did you try and pass him off as a pledge and try to cheat to win intramural hockey?

One of your fraternity members gained my respect when he wrote a letter commending the competition and the rivalry that Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Alpha Epsilon have and how the competition that we show out on the fields is what all-sports is about.

Now, I no longer feel that way. All-sports is all about good sportsmanship whether you win or lose.

Obviously your egos are too big to see that. You took cheap shots, now I'm taking mine. There's a lot of sports left this year, and what comes around goes around. I would do all your talking now, because I don't think we'll hear much from you in the spring.

Good recycling habits important

Although the University recycling program ranks high in the state, some students, faculty and other employees at this University still do not practice good recycling habits. This has caused me to wonder why.

I assume that for some people here, it's just laziness or an I-don't-care attitude which causes them not to recycle. For others, it's just about any excuse, from it's an inconvenience to have to sort and clean "garbage," to not knowing how to recycle and not taking the time to learn, or even believing that it draws bugs (which I've heard from my landlords).

Incidentally, properly preparing and storing recyclables actually draws less bugs than keeping garbage in your trash can.

I believe that anyone can recycle, and those who do are more in touch with the environment.

Recycling at the University (and in the city as well) is entirely voluntary. Considering this fact, the amount of material collected is tremendous.

However, we can still do a better job.

We are fortunate in this area not to be "forced" to recycle. Some states like North Carolina have a state mandate which prohibits aluminum cans in their landfills.

This more or less orders the residents of North Carolina to recycle.

As landfills reach their limits all over the United States, recycling will steadily affect all of our lives.

So, recycling now at least prepares you for the day recycling becomes a national law.

Gordon blows through Fla.

BAREFOOT BAY, Fla. -- Pink insulation hung from broken branches like strips of confetti. The crumpled remains of mobile homes littered the streets. Drenched furniture lay buried under crushed metal and wooden beams.

"I said, 'What is that noise?' and everything blew," Seline Harrod recalled Wednesday. "I laid my face down on the floor and my husband laid on top of me."

Harrod and her neighbors told tales of terror the morning after Tropical Storm Gordon sent a tornado through this tight-knit retirement community, where people socialize over shuffleboard and fire auxiliary chicken dinners.

The storm generated other tornadoes and thunderstorms on a 200-mile path across Florida after devastating Haiti. Radio reports put the death toll in Haiti at up to 400.

Jailed Lake missed TV

NEW YORK -- Spending a night in jail was more horrible than Ricki Lake could have imagined. "I made a big sacrifice," she told David Letterman on Tuesday. "I missed my favorite show, 'Melrose Place.'"

Lake and 15 others handcuffed themselves together in fashion designer Karl Lagerfeld's offices Monday to protest his use of fur. Lake was charged with criminal trespass, criminal mischief and criminal tampering -- all misdemeanors punishable by up to a year in jail.

She was released Tuesday, in time for her appearance on Letterman's show.

Lake, host of a syndicated talk show, said she spent most of the night in handcuffs and didn't eat the bologna-and-cheese sandwiches offered to prisoners. She did enjoy the company of the police, however.

"I signed more autographs and posed for pictures with the cops more than I ever did on the street," she said.

He also hasn't had a drink in a decade. But he does have one remaining vice: driving fast. He says the daily trip home from Manhattan to New Canaan, Conn., is therapeutic.

LOS ANGELES -- Jerry Rubin, the former Chicago Seven anti-war activist-turned food entrepreneur, was critically injured when he was hit by a car while jaywalking, authorities said Tuesday.

Rubin, 56, a Cincinnati native, was crossing Wilshire Boulevard Monday evening when he was hit, police Officer Sandra Castello said. The car's driver doesn't won't be charged, she said.

Rubin was in critical condition Tuesday after surgery, said Warren Robak, a spokesman for the University of California at Los Angeles Medical Center.

The former radical was among the Chicago Seven, tried for conspiring to disrupt the 1968 Democratic National Convention, which turned into a bloody battle between anti-war protesters and police.

Rubin, Abbie Hoffman and three others were convicted of crossing state lines with intent to riot. The convictions were overturned by an appeals court, which cited errors made by the judge. They were acquitted of conspiracy charges.

Rubin was a Yippie leader -- the Youth International Party -- a loosely knit group of radicals who protested the government and the Vietnam War.

ing from drinking it is very small, Baker said. The risk is well below federal limits, despite what the report says.

Clark, although he is worried about herbicides in the water, told a Bowling Green student who called into the program that University students do not need to be concerned about drinking the water.

"As far as [the students'] exposure, if she's a four-year student at BG, I wouldn't worry about it," Clark said.

"What we're talking about here is long-term exposure," Clark said. "If you have a stomachache, it's probably because you have midterms coming up. It's not because of herbicides in the water."

Baker told another caller that there is no cause for any concern about taking showers in Bowling Green water either, according to studies of chemical uptake through the skin.

"The uptake through the skin would be minimal relative to drinking water or ingestion of herbicides," Baker said. "So I see no basis for being concerned about uptake of the water through showers or swimming in the river."

Clark said he remains unconvinced that herbicides pose no risks to water drinkers.

"There's evidence to suggest that some of these herbicides are related to breast cancer, and the U.S. EPA also added data that suggests that herbicides are now showing up in cow's milk."

cerning this issue, but still understands the viewpoints of each side.

"Although there are very valid merits to turning the parking lot into a grassy area, and I understand the environmental impact on keeping it a parking lot, USG as a whole has to support the resolution with keeping the area a parking lot," Mathe said.

Although the plans have been discussed, the idea has not been made an official project, University architect Roland Engler said.

"What the plans are at this point seem to involve a pedestrian mall type of idea that would include a series of walkways, improved lighting, sidewalk systems and landscaping," Engler said. "Again, though, this is not an official project yet; only ideas and interest factors have been discussed."

The new pedestrian walkway would affect the areas of Ridge Street between Prout and Hayes halls and Lot A between Centrex and University Hall. The project would definitely eliminate some parking space to the lot in front of Eppler, but how many cannot be determined at this time, Engler said.

Because the project is presently unofficial, a time when the actual project would take place or if it even will take place cannot be determined.

There are four things students should know about condoms, Brecht said.

First, students should be wary of condoms that come in see-through packaging, she said.

"If the package is clear, then there is a greater possibility for light to shine through," Brecht said. "Any time light or heat is on a condom, there is a chance that it will be less effective."

Students should also be wary of condoms that come in foil wrappers because the foil has a tendency to tear the condom when it is being taken out of the package, she said.

It should also say 'this product will prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases' on the condom package, otherwise it may not be effective, she said.

Finally, students should not expose condoms to extreme heat or cold and should make sure not to use a condom past the expiration date, she said.

Brecht also addressed the subject of oral sex, to which she gave homemade remedies, including latex gloves and plastic wrap, that students can use at a low cost to stop the transmission of HIV.

Panel discusses migrant aid

By Angelica D. Huesca
The BG News

Committee reviews organizations' role in helping Northwest farmers

A panel representing both student and community organizations addressed the various issues and concerns facing migrant workers in Northwest Ohio on Wednesday.

The presentation was the second of the semester. "The Migrant Experience in Northwest Ohio" was sponsored by the University Libraries and Learning Resources Multicultural Affairs Committee.

The six-member panel looked at the ways state, local and community organizations can help the migrants adjust to the environment.

Benito Lucia, a representative of the State Employment Bureau, addressed the rights migrant farm workers have and the programs and opportunities available to them.

He said he believed the migrant farm worker program is very productive and beneficial to the community. The workers are taxpayers just like every other legal worker in America who deserve rights, he said.

Lucia said it was important for migrant farm workers to take advantage of the programs offered them to seek advancement.

"You can do whatever you want to in terms of education and employment," he said.

Shirley Green, a representative from the non-profit organization Rural Opportunities, discussed the programs the companies offer to advocate better lives for migrant farm workers.

These programs include on-the-job training, testing and assessment, supportive services, classroom training, follow-ups, Migrant Headstart, health and safety and housing and economic development.

According to the mission statement, Rural Opportunities Inc. is part of a multi-state corporation established in 1969 to provide services to and advocating on the behalf of migrant and seasonal farmworkers and other rural disadvantaged.

Green said there are a lot of programs dedicated to helping Spanish-speaking migrant farm workers to learn English and those who can't speak to have a translator to assist with their landlords and other important people to ensure their rights and that they are not taken advantage of.

Dora Vega, a University student, said she has been a migrant farm worker for eight years now.

She said she has always been encouraged to achieve her goals in life, and in order to achieve those goals it is necessary for her to work and attend school at the same time.

"One thing that I learned through my experience as a migrant worker is that it is a very tough job," she said.

Vega said she plans on "giving back to the Mexican-American community and help other migrant farm workers achieve a level of success."

Bellanira Vega, a University student, said many migrant workers encourage their children to seek higher education and stress its importance.

"Without education, the community will suffer a continuous cycle," she said.

She said she believes there will always be a need for migrant farm workers, and although there has been lots of machinery taking over, she hopes this will not take jobs away from the workers.

She said she has enjoyed her time as a migrant worker, except for the living conditions of the camps.

Cathy Glassford, of Community Health Services, spoke about health problems concerning the migrant workers. She said that contrary to her own personal theory, there were no differences in the health problems between migrant workers and others.

"Some of the things that do contribute to the health problems are the conditions of the camps migrant workers live in and the lack of running water," she said.

Some of the more serious problems discussed were urinary tract infections, a 25 percent higher infant mortality rate, dental diseases, teen-age pregnancy, diabetes, hypertension and skin disorders within the migrant worker community.

Glassford said the Community Health Services help the workers by sending two medical professionals into the camps to tell them what is available to them. They also offer a sliding fee scale to provide help on prescription medication.

Carolyn Shaid, regional coordinator of Migrant Education, concluded. She began by saying that many people don't realize that there is federal aid that provides education for the workers.

She said there are programs available to children from the pre-school age to the age of 16. Math, reading and oral language development are educational supplements provided.

Shaid said the students are offered a hot breakfast, lunch and snacks.

"Field trips and other fun activities are some of the things the kids can look forward to," she said.

Shaid said there is transportation provided for the students, and there is a bilingual assistant available to help students deal with discrimination from other students.

Komives cold, but men still beat Latvian team

By Marty Fuller
The BG News

The BG men's basketball squad used its trademark -- excellent shooting -- to put away the visiting Latvian National team 85-73 during an exhibition contest on Wednesday night.

Although junior Shane Komives could only connect on 2-9 attempts, the other four starters picked up the slack and drilled 28 buckets on 41 attempts. "We are going to need to get Shane Komives more shots," Falcon head coach Jim Larranaga said. "He had nine tonight, but I'd like to feel like we can get him better ones than he got. When we do, we become a better basketball team."

Senior center Shane Kline-Ruminski led all Falcons with 9-11 shooting that included a three pointer to go with a couple of free throws for 21 points.

"I think Shane played pretty consistently throughout the game. I think in the first half he was looking to pass the ball a little bit more -- I think we're all like that. I wanted us to push the ball much more and get into our offense much quicker than we did," Larranaga said.

"We are going to need to get Shane Komives more shots. He had nine tonight, but I'd like to feel like we can get him better ones than he got. When we do, we become a better basketball team."

BG head coach

Kline-Ruminski posted the first points of the game, and the Falcons never looked back. The Latvians tied up the score at 8-8 with 15:51 left in the first half, but that was as close as they would get to a lead.

With nine minutes left in the first stanza, BG went on a three-point shooting spree. On four of their next five possessions Denny Amrhein, Komives, Antonio Daniels and Ray Lynch all hit from downtown to give BG a 31-24 lead. The two teams traded hoops until the intermission, and BG headed to the locker room with a 37-29 lead.

"In the second half we [pushed the ball a little bit faster]. We started with a high post man screen and let Antonio just drive it to the goal a couple of times," Larranaga said.

With more of a comfortable up-tempo game, BG broke open the contest by building a 16-point lead. The Latvians struck back with a run of their own and chopped their deficit to six with 7:38 left in the game.

"We called a time-out to set up a particular play. They switched their defense and we didn't adjust well and we had two quick turnovers that led to their run," Larranaga said.

The Latvians were led by Gundars Vetra's 19 points and former Ohio State forward Jamaal Brown's 13 markers.

After the game Larranaga said a major area of concern for the Falcons' future was rebounding. BG was out-rebounded 32-29.

"I thought it was a good test for us because of their ability to rebound. We are going to need to do a better job there. I think that's something that is real critical. Rebounding is a major key in being successful," Larranaga said.

Second-stanza rally falls short for women's squad

By Katie Simmons
The BG News

After a disappointing first half, the Bowling Green Falcons managed to challenge Latvia through the second half but were still defeated 78-70 in last night's women's basketball expedition game.

Going into the second half with a 13-point deficit due to a poor 29 percent mark from the field, Bowling Green used a pressing defense to get back in the game. "We obviously didn't play as well as we should have in the first half, but we did better than we did at our first expedition game," head coach Jaci Clark said.

"The kids need to know that we need to go out there and play and be a lot more aggressive, and when we do that we will be all right."

At one point the two teams managed to stay within a basket of each other while the defenses battled at the start of the first period. Latvia's overall team height began to take a toll on Bowling Green, though, as they managed to accumulate 49 rebounds from the Falcons' 69 shots.

"We definitely had a lot of missed opportunities," Clark said. "We shot very poorly in the first half, and that is something that we need to work on."

The overall tempo for the match-up seemed to favor the slower Latvian team. Clark said that the Falcons will have to speed things up in the regular season.

"We have to be stronger with the ball. In the first half we had one offensive rebound -- that is not going to win a game for us," Clark said. "The tempo of the game wasn't where we needed it; we needed a fast break early and we didn't do that."

Although the team was disappointed in Wednesday's match, individual team members began to show their mark for the upcoming season.

Senior forward Michelle Shade led the team offensively with 11 points out of 23 shots. Sharleen Hooper also made a strong showing, along with freshman Sara Puthoff.

"We had a lot of players step up and do their job, but right now we need some other players to do that as well," Clark said. "Sara [Puthoff] is playing her game. She's a very good shooter, and she does her job well."

Michigan, OSU to battle for berth in Citrus Bowl

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS -- Around Ohio and Michigan, it used to be known as The Game. But because Michigan has dominated the last six meetings with Ohio State, many don't believe The Game is much more than A Game these days.

"Maybe to make people in Ohio happy, I'll say that in November, this is Michigan's biggest rivalry," Michigan coach Gary Moeller -- an Ohio State grad even -- said Monday.

Thirty-two times since the teams began playing on the last Saturday of the Big Ten season in 1935, The Game has decided the conference championship. Eighteen times, the two teams have decided it among themselves.

It has been eight years, however, since The Game has had the Rose Bowl on the line for both. It has been seven years since the Buckeyes beat the Wolverines.

When The Game kicks off Saturday in Ohio Stadium, for the first time since 1987 neither team will be playing for Pasadena. Penn State has clinched the Big Ten title.

Coaches and players on both sides of the border war will do the politically correct thing this week and say it's as big as it ever was. It remains big in the ratings -- it's ABC's only national telecast on the same day top 10 teams Alabama and Auburn will play each other in front of a regional audience.

But it's not big in the national rankings -- Michigan is 7-3 and 15th, Ohio State 8-3 and 22nd -- nor the Big Ten standings. The winner finishes second and earns a bid to the Florida Citrus Bowl. The loser is third and headed for the Holiday Bowl.

Another bad moon rising for Atlanta wide receiver

By Karyn Spellman
The Associated Press

SUWANEE, Ga. -- Andre Rison has had his problems this season, and they're starting to get expensive.

The Atlanta Falcons' star receiver was suspended for a game Wednesday for being late to a team meeting. The action will cost him $37,000 in lost salary.

Earlier this year, Rison fought on the field with former teammate Deion Sanders, and the NFL fined him $7,500.

The suspension comes a week after the All-Pro wide receiver was critical of coach June Jones and the Falcons' offense, but Jones said the only reason for the suspension was that Rison was late after being warned to be on time.

"I wanted to stress that he's going to be treated just like everyone else," Jones said. "There's no special treatment here. ...

"He's certainly been dependable for us on the field. I think he needs to look and see what he's got to do to be more responsible off the field."

Jones, who held Rison out of the first quarter of a game against the Raiders on Oct. 23 in Los Angeles for being late for the team bus, said he called Rison's name twice and then started the meeting without him.

On Oct. 16 against the 49ers, Sanders started punching Rison on the helmet, and Rison hit back. Only Sanders was flagged for a penalty, but both players were fined $7,500 by the league.

Rison's agent, Charles Tucker, said his client has accepted the suspension, which will sideline him for Sunday's game at Denver.

"He's admitted that he shouldn't have been late," Tucker said by telephone from his office in Michigan. "He has to be a man about this and he has been." He said Rison was three minutes late for the meeting.

"I hope something positive comes out of this," Tucker said. "We're not going to make a big issue of it. He hates it. The coaches hate it. He's going to be ready to rock and roll on Monday."

Rison started the season with 26 catches in the first two games.

Indy running back glad Bengals passed him over

By Joe Kay
The Associated Press

CINCINNATI -- Marshall Faulk knew before the draft that he wasn't going to be the Cincinnati Bengals' top pick. But to this day, the thought of wearing tiger stripes makes the running back chuckle.

Faulk is glad the Bengals passed him by last April, giving Indianapolis the chance to take him with the second overall pick. Faulk has become a star with the Colts, who come to town next weekend to play the Bengals.

While No. 1 pick Dan Wilkinson struggles on the Bengals' defensive line, Faulk has become one of the NFL's top rushers and the leading candidate for offensive rookie of the year honors. He leads the AFC in touchdowns and total yards.

"I'm glad of my situation. I'm glad I was drafted No. 2," Faulk said Wednesday, in a conference call. "I'm glad I'm with the Colts. I'm happy with the situation here."

He might not have been so happy in Cincinnati. When a reporter reminded him that the Bengals could have chosen him, Faulk cackled loudly for several seconds.

Did he have any thoughts about the Bengals last April?

"No, none whatsoever," he said, then cackled some more.

After a few seconds, he added, "I kind of knew I wouldn't get drafted by the Bengals."

It seems that Faulk felt slighted by the Bengals as they weighed their options for the

No. 1 pick. They could have used either player -- their running game was weak and their defense was terrible. In the end, they thought that Wilkinson, an Ohio native who went to Ohio State, would help them more.

Although the Bengals publicly gushed praise on Faulk, the running back from San Diego State said he heard other things secondhand.

"Coming out of college and going through the whole process, I've had a lot of run-ins with the Bengals," he said. "Things were said that maybe I wasn't fast enough or I wasn't big enough or I couldn't run the ball in the NFL. Those questions were brought about by the Bengals' organization."

Faulk wouldn't say where he heard those things. The only specific example he gave involved his workout for Bengals assistant coach Jim Anderson. He said Anderson was impressed by his time in the 40-yard dash, which Faulk interpreted as a sign the Bengals didn't think he could run so well.

The Bengals were surprised to hear Faulk's statements Wednesday.

"None of what you just mentioned to me is true or ever came from anybody in this organization," coach Dave Shula said. "We made the choice that we felt was best for our team. Nobody questioned Marshall Faulk's ability and the fact that he would be a great NFL player."

Anderson said he lobbied for the Bengals to choose Faulk.

Indianapolis running back Marshall Faulk said he felt slighted when Cincinnati took Dan Wilkinson over him in this year's NFL Draft. But 10 games into the season, Faulk said he's happy to be with the Colts.

"He was the best back in the draft," Anderson said. "I was pushing for him very strongly. You can't say enough good things about him."

Wilkinson wound up with a six-year, $14.4 million contract, denting the Bengals' reputation for tough negotiations with first-round picks. Faulk is glad he didn't have to test them.

"I knew the reputation of them not paying or not wanting to pay," he said. "I'm just glad I didn't have the opportunity to deal with it or experience it."

Big Dog working hard to make it big in Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE -- Know this about Glenn Robinson: He can live without your affection or your approval, and the $68 million he got from the Milwaukee Bucks puts everything else pretty much within his reach.

Jim Litke

That's not to say the Big Dog wouldn't welcome the opportunity to get out of the big doghouse of public opinion. He would. Big time.

One measure of how much is how hard Robinson has worked to scrape the rust off his game in the short time since he returned to work. A second is how the shy 21-year-old is going out of his way to win friends and influence people.

"I expect to do good -- don't get me wrong," Robinson said Tuesday. He was sitting courtside in the empty Bradley Center, a few minutes after a tough morning practice and a few hours before he would have his best night as a pro -- 18 points and six rebounds in 23 minutes in an 82-81 win over Indiana.

"I expect to do what I'm supposed to do. But a lot of people that don't know the game, they think it's all about scoring. I look at it from a team perspective. We have to do well as a team."

"I don't need to go out there and score 30 points a game and have us lose. That won't do us any good. It would help me individually," Robinson added. "But I want to see all of us get something done."

No one is sure exactly when it was Robinson had his attitude adjusted -- when he became more concerned about Milwaukee's Bucks than his own -- only grateful that the adjustment has been made.

Two weeks ago, after he had skipped training camp and was still holding out, Robinson was regarded in this hard-working town as the poster boy for athletic greed. He was in the wrong place at the wrong time with the wrong agent at his side and the wrong price on his head.

Baseball was on strike, hockey was on strike and a public that already had less sympathy for athletes than incumbent congressmen was reading about a kid who hadn't played a minute of pro ball and vowed not to until he got a guaranteed 13 years at a cool $100 mil. Making matters worse, his agent, Charles Tucker, was trying to pass Robinson off as "a victim of circumstances. ... This is a very bad time for any athlete to be doing anything dealing with money."

Not that bad, as it turned out. Not long after Bucks owner Herb Kohl lanced Robinson's ambitions with a jibe about trading his team for the kid's contract even up, a deal was struck. Robinson lowered his sights and signed the 10-year, $68.15 million guaranteed contract just in time to make the Bucks' first home game. A sold-out crowd gave him a standing ovation that lasted nearly two minutes.

"They're excited about me being here," Robinson said. Left unsaid was whether last season's 20-62 record has made Milwaukeeans more inclined than the rest of the country to forgive and forget. A visitor asked Robinson about his reception on the road.

"I don't really pay too much attention to that," he said, "because most of the time, on the road, they're going to say something negative."

He may have been the most highly touted player coming out this year, but so far the return on investment has been neither immediate nor particularly impressive. Skipping training appears to have cost Robinson more than just popularity. His unfamiliarity with Milwaukee's offense made coach Mike Dunleavy hesitant to use him, and his lack of conditioning made him even more of a liability.

Not only wasn't the $68-million man and savior of the franchise not starting; until Tuesday night, Robinson wasn't even the first power forward off the bench or the one on the floor at crunch time. That distinction belonged to Marty Conlon, a Continental Basketball Association refugee and temporary hire making a less-than-budget-busting $200,000.

But along with a few other things, that may have changed. When the Bucks went cold in the fourth quarter Tuesday night and nearly blew the game, Dunleavy turned to Robinson.

Trent leads Bobcats past overmatched OSU squad

By Rusty Miller
The Associated Press

COLUMBUS -- Gary Trent had a hand in it, but even he was surprised at how quickly Ohio University overtook Ohio State night in the first round of the Preseason NIT.

"I knew we were down 10, then all of a sudden I looked up and we had made a nice 20-point turnaround," Trent said of an 18-0 uprising in the first half that spurred the Bobcats to a 78-67 victory Wednesday night.

Trent scored 10 points in that first-half sprint, finishing the game with 26 points. The two-time Mid-American Conference player of the year, a Columbus native, hit 10-of-19 shots from the field, including both of his 3-point attempts. He added 15 rebounds.

It was a special night for the Bobcats and for Trent. The victory was Ohio U.'s first against a Big Ten Conference team since the last time it defeated Ohio State, on Dec. 29, 1973. Ohio State had won the last seven meetings in the series.

It also marked the first time Trent's father had seen him play in a college game. Dexter Trent has spent the last six years in a Kentucky prison on drug charges.

"I didn't think about him being there during the game, just after it was over," Trent said.

Ohio U. returned eight of its top nine players from last year's team that went 25-8, won the MAC regular-season and tournament titles and played in the NCAA tournament.

Two Ohio State starters transferred and three other players were kicked off the team after skirmishes with the law in the wake of a 13-16 record last year, the school's first losing season in 17 years.

"This was the biggest setup I've ever had in 24 years of coaching," said Ohio U. coach Larry Hunter. "No one thought we could lose. ... It was a no-win situation."

Ohio U. advances to play Friday night at Virginia, which defeated Old Dominion 83-80 in another first-round game Wednesday.

Despite being heavy underdogs, Ohio State led by as many as 11 points in the opening half, going up 22-11 on walkon Kevin Martin's second 3-pointer with 9:24 left. But then Ohio U., which has won 14 of its last 15 games, started flexing its muscles.

Gus Johnson started the run with a 3-pointer off an inbounds pass with 9:03 left in the half. After Ohio State's Tony Watson picked up his second foul on the offensive boards, Jeff Boals hit a 15-footer, Trent muscled in a follow and then hit a layup after picking up a loose ball to cut the lead to 22-20.

Ohio State's Antonio Watson tries to dribble past Ohio's Jason Terry during the Bobcats' 78-67 victory over the Buckeyes Wednesday.

The Bobcats then hit three straight 3-pointers -- two by Trent and one by Johnson -- to push the lead to 29-22 by the 4:32 mark and complete the 18-0 run.

"OU kept its poise and wore us down. They didn't panic," Ohio State coach Randy Ayers said. "We lost our patience in the first half and got too quick on the trigger and it hurt our defense at the other end."

Ohio U. scored 11 points in the game's first 10:57, but made up for the slow start with 26 points to the buzzer.

The Buckeyes pulled to within 60-55 with 8:36 left after Rick Yudt hit two free throws, but Ohio U. pulled away again.

Johnson made a perimeter jumper and Trent hit a pair of free throws to make it 64-55.

After Ohio State's Doug Etzler hit a basket, Terry popped in a rebound follow and was fouled. He missed the shot, but Trent rebounded and powered it in to make it 68-57. Boals ended the 8-2 run with a driving layup.

"I was happy to win and get to the next round," Trent said. "We're just trying to get to Madison Square Garden (for the NIT semifinals)."

1962 Ohio State football team, has said he now considers Michigan State his team's main rival because of the in-state recruiting advantage that presumably goes to the victor. Notre Dame also has become a rival in the last 10 years, with a 5-4-1 advantage in the series.

Detroit Lions linebacker Chris Spielman, who was captain when Ohio State beat Michigan the last time in 1987, said, "Michigan fans have taken Ohio State for granted. It's kind of sad in a way. But when you're successful like they have been, you get that confidence."

Dave Purdy, a quarterback under Woody Hayes at Ohio State and now a football commentator for a Columbus radio station, said that in the 1960s and '70s there was nothing like the week of the Michigan game.

"I don't think it's the coach that's the problem. I think our whole administration has accepted the fact that we're not on the same level with them, and I think that's a shame," Purdy said.

Former OSU tailback Jeff Logan, a game analyst on another station, agrees that Michigan has cut a higher national profile -- because of its success in football and two trips to the NCAA championship game in basketball.

"You travel around the country and go into the shops in any airport and what do you see? Michigan, Florida State and Miami stuff. Never do you see Ohio State stuff," Logan said. "Kids are grabbing up that Michigan stuff and they're dreaming about going to Michigan."

A year ago Ohio State was unbeaten and No. 5 going into the Michigan game. The unranked Wolverines thrashed the Buckeyes 28-0.

Former Ohio State running back and current assistant coach Tim Spencer keeps the score on a sign in his office.

He also wears to work every day a pair of "gold pants" -- a gold trinket on a necklace that is given to every OSU player who beats Michigan. The tradition was started in 1934 by coach Francis Schmidt, who preached to his players that the Wolverines put their pants on just as they did, one leg at a time.

No current OSU player owns a pair. Spencer said that's why he wears his.

"You get a little conversation from some of the guys, saying they want to get some, asking where they come from, what's the tradition behind it," Spencer said. "You get them to understand what it is to have them, that you don't get them for just winning a game. You get them for winning The Game."
